On the dates in question employee D. Marks was working on a part time basis (six hours per day), when a junior employee V. Stanacie was working full time eight hours per day.

AWARD OF THE ARBITRATOR

The only issue that requires resolution in this dispute is whether the company imposed an unreasonable or improper qualification that an employee be bilingual in order to provide relief work in operating the company's telex at its business premises in Lachine, P.Q. In this regard, the grievor, Ms. June Marks, complains she was improperly by-passed for a less senior employee with respect to two hours of relief work on the telex machine because she could not speak French. The less senior employee who performed the relief work and who was paid the premium for the two hours she worked was bilingual.

The company's reason for requiring its telex operators to hold bilingual qualification, particularly with respect to being conversant in the French language, is motivated by the enactment of Bill 101 by the Province's Legislative Assembly. Bill 101 reads in part as follows:

COMMUNICATIONS WITH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTORS:

2. Every person has a right to have the civil administration, the health services and social services, the public utility firms, the professional corporations, the associations of employees and all business firms doing business in Quebec communicate with him in French.

CONSUMERS:

5. Consumers of goods and services have a right to be informed and served in French.

Although the grievor may very well have performed relief services in the past on the telex machine, it is patently obvious that the work environment affecting businesses in the Province of Quebec has been dramatically affected by the enactment of Bill 101. Although it might very well be argued that the company, insofar as it is a Federal undertaking, remains unaffected by Bill 101, common sense would dictate that, where possible, it should make a reasonable attempt to accommodate its operations to the language prescriptions of the Province in which it does business. Since I cannot find that the requirement that an employee be conversant in both the English and French languages is an unreasonable qualification to be imposed on employees whose jobs require contact with the public in the Province of Quebec, the grievor, in my view was properly by-passed with respect to the relief work in question.

The grievance is accordingly dismissed.
